PYRAMID SCHEME

Entry costs are typically high and feel more like an investment.

Participants are compensated primarily for recruiting other participants.

Products are an afterthought, hold little to no consumer value, and lack any legitimate R&D investment.

Participants are required to buy more products than they can reasonably sell or use.

Participants are not allowed to return unused inventories.

There is not a written contract providing key terms and a definite cancellation period (no formal rights, recourse or protections).
