technology for modern lighting devices The work reported in this thesis in intended to study the high voltage and low current features of the T5 high efficient T5 HE fluorescent lamp with ULL magnetic ballast Also this ULL ballast has been incorporated with the outdoor Light Emitting Diode LED street lamp This thesis contains seven chapters Chapter 1 introduces a sustainable lighting technology at our society It should satisfy the criteria of 1 energy saving 2 long lifetime and 3 recyclability According to the CELMA guide 54 electronic ballasts for T5 28W lamps with total power consumption not exceeding 32W i e ballast loss Chapter 2 presents a Class A2 Ultra low loss magnetic ballast for T5 fluorescent lamps With a better luminous efficacy lower product and maintenance costs much longer lifetime and the use of recyclable metallic materials over its electronic counterparts this patent proposal provides a truly sustainable lighting solution to the lighting technology Chapter 3 presents a patent of single design of an ultra low loss magnetic ballast for T5 high efficient T5 HE fluorescent lamps rated from 14 to 35W It is discovered that the same set of ballast parameters can be chosen for operating T5 HE 14 21 28 and 35 W lamps at their respective rated power at a mains voltage in the range of 220 240V This single ballast design offers great convenience to both ballast manufacturers and users because only one product design can cover a range of the most popular T5 HE lamps Chapter 4 presents the analysis of the low temperature operation at 15 and frequent ignition of T5 high efficient T5 HE lamps Also a bypass resistor is incorporated to each filament to avoid local hot spot and therefore protect the filament So this patent design can provide a robust wide temperature range operation high efficiency and environmental friendly lighting solution to our society Chapter 5 presents a patent passive offline light emitting diode LED driver which has no controlled semiconductor switches electrolytic capacitors auxiliary power supply and control board This new circuit has the advantageous of high input power factor high energy efficiency and luminous efficacy long lifetime stable luminous output and high robustness against extreme weather conditions Chapter 6 presents an investigation into the effects of the physical and current arrangements of high power LED array systems Experimental and theoretical results have been proved that for the same rated power and using the same heatsink double string LED structure offers a higher efficacy and total luminous flux than single string due to the lower devices junction temperature Chapter 7 concludes the thesis
