

Ecosystem Structure:Food chains and trophic levels

1. food chain: shows a flow of energy from one organism to the next
2. food web: shows a complex network of interrelated food chains
3. trophic level: a position that an organism or a group of organisms in a community occupies in a food chain
4. producers or autotrophs: which manufacture their own food from inorganic substances
5. consumers or heterotrophs: which feed on autotrophs or other heterotrophs to obtain energy
6. decomposers: consumers that obtain energy from dead organisms
7. detritivores: consumers that derive their food from detritus or decomposing organic material

Ecological pyramids

1. Pyramid of numbers: shows the number of organisms at each trophic level in a food chain
 - advantages:
 - o easy method of giving an overview
 - o good for comparing changes in population numbers over different times
 - disadvantages:
 - o all organisms included regardless of their size
 - o numbers can be too great to represent accurately
2. Pyramid of biomass: contains the biomass at each trophic level
 - advantages:
 - o overcomes the problems of pyramids of numbers
 - disadvantages:
 - o only uses samples from populations, so it's impossible to measure biomass exactly
 - o organisms must be killed to measure dry mass
3. pyramid of productivity: contains the flow of energy through each trophic level; shows the energy being generated and available as food to the next trophic level during a fixed period of time
 - advantages:
 - o shows the actual energy transferred and allows for rate of production
 - disadvantages:
 - o very difficult and complex to collect energy data as the rate of biomass production over time is required
4. bioaccumulation and biomagnification
 - bioaccumulation: increase in concentration in one organism over time
 - §biomagnification: increase in concentration with the increase in trophic levels
