Solids, Liquids, Gases...Oh My!

Three of the four phases of matter are solid, liquid, and gas.

Gasses hold no shape of their own but fill the volume of whatever container they inhabit. The molecules bounce around and are spread far apart from one another.

Liquid has volume but no fixed shape. A liquid is poured and will take the shape of the container into which it is poured. The molecules in a liquid bounce around.

Solids have a definite shape and volume. The molecules are packed very tightly together.

Directions: Look at the molecules in the cups below. Label which one is a gas, a liquid, and a solid. Then, write an example of each phase of matter.
