Taoism is a collection of teachings that started in China around the same time that Buddhism was beginning in Nepal and India. Taoism (also spelled Daoism) is attributed to the ancient Chinese philosopher named Lao Tzu, though there is very little evidence that this person ever existed at all. A book of poetry and sayings called the Tao Te Ching has been attributed to him, but may have been written by a collection of authors around 200 BCE. The Tao Te Ching gives suggestions on how humans and all living and non-living things should exist in harmony with each other, as well as the universe. Taoists believe that when a person dies, their spirit joins that universe. As Taoism developed and passed down over many centuries, deities (gods) emerged in stories and today are worshiped in Taoist temples around the world. Alongside Buddhism, Taoism is a major spiritual force in China, Japan, and South Korea today.
