

Frogs and Toads

Written by Martha Hoch

Do you like frogs? Many kids do. Did you know that frogs and toads are not the same kind of animal? They may look like each other, but there's many ways that these animals are different.

Both animals are in the amphibian family. Just like people in your family have things in common, frogs and toads share some basic traits. All amphibians have backbones. They are also cold blooded, which means their bodies are only as warm as their surroundings. Frogs and toads both spend time on land and on water. When they are young, they breathe with gills. As they grow from a tadpole to froglet (or the larvae stage), they form lungs. They also loose their tails and grow legs.
