

Frequently Asked Questions

1. What is the D_{100} ?
 - a. The D_{100} cut point of a screen is the largest particle size which will pass through the screen.
 - b. D_{100} is a single number determined from a prescribed laboratory procedure – the results of the procedure should yield the same value for any given screen.
 - c. The D_{100} should not be compared in any way to the D_{50} value used in API RP 13E.
 - d. The method used in API RP 13C provides only the D_{100} value with no provision for d_{100} , d_{50} , or d_{25} values.
2. What does the API Screen Number tell us?
 - a. The API Screen Number corresponds to the API defined range of sizes into which the D_{100} value falls.
3. What does the API Screen Number NOT tell us?
 - a. The API Screen Number is a single number which defines solids separation potential under specific test conditions. It does NOT define how a screen will operate on a shaker in the field as this will depend upon several other parameters such as fluid type & properties, shaker design, operating parameters, ROP, bit type, etc.
4. Will a screen with a D_{100} of 172 μ remove solids finer than 172 μ ?
 - a. By definition, every particle of the D_{100} size or coarser will be discarded.
 - b. In practice some portion of solids finer than 172 μ may be removed.
5. Why is there such a large variance between the old and new labeling values?
 - a. The biggest variation is due to the shift from using D_{50} to D_{100} .
 - b. The previous test procedure (API RP 13E) measured the distribution of the apertures in the screen.
 - c. API RP 13C uses a physical and repeatable test using actual solids (dry aluminum oxide) which measures the coarsest particle that can pass through the screen.
6. Should I use the old screen number or the new API Screen Number when ordering replacement screens?
 - a. Although some companies are changing their part numbers to reflect their conformance to API RP 13C, others are not. It is therefore best to specify the API RP 13C value you want.
7. Should I screen with a finer screen now if what used to be called a “200 mesh” screen is now labeled API 120?
 - a. Users are advised to determine the screens that work best in their applications regardless of what the new API Screen Number happens to be.
8. What is the practical value of API RP 13C to the end user?
 - a. API RP 13C provides an unequivocal procedure and benchmark for comparing different screens.
 - b. The primary intent of API RP 13C is to provide a standard measuring system for screens.
