

Activity 4.7.3 Special Right Triangles and Trigonometric Ratios

Please complete this activity without the use of a calculator. Now that you know the relationships among the sides in special right triangles, you can use those patterns to solve any special right triangle without a calculator.

For example suppose we want to evaluate $\sin(30^\circ)$. This means to find, in a right triangle, the ratio of the side length opposite the 30° angle to the length of the hypotenuse.

Since all 30° - 60° - 90° triangles are similar by the AA Similarity Theorem, it doesn't matter which length you choose to represent a side. Let's begin with finding a length for the hypotenuse since the length of the short leg is $\frac{1}{2}$ the length of the hypotenuse and the long leg is $\sqrt{3}$ multiplied by the length of the short leg.

1. Suppose the length of the hypotenuse is 2 (which is a nice even number).

That now gives us

We now have enough information to see that $\sin(30^\circ) = \underline{\hspace{1cm}}$.

2. Suppose had chosen 4 to represent your hypotenuse. What value would you have calculated for the short leg _____? Is the ratio of that value to 4 equivalent to $\frac{1}{2}$?

3. Continuing to solve for the legs in the triangle will allow you to find other trigonometric ratios or sine ratios of a different acute angle. What is the length of the long leg in this triangle? _____

4. Use the length found in question 3 to find $\cos(30^\circ) = \underline{\hspace{1cm}}$
5. Use the length found in question 3 to find $\tan(30^\circ) = \underline{\hspace{1cm}}$
6. Rationalize the denominator to your answer in question 5. $\underline{\hspace{1cm}}$
7. Use the length found in question 3 to find $\sin(60^\circ) = \underline{\hspace{1cm}}$
8. Use the length found in question 3 to find $\tan(60^\circ) = \underline{\hspace{1cm}}$
