In After the Bomb, composers not only consider the interplay of the personal and the political but also manipulate textual forms and features in response to their times.

In your response, you MUST refer to 2 poems from Sylvia Plath's Ariel (selected from the prescribed poems), plus EITHER Waiting for Godot OR Good Night and Good Luck and TWO texts of your own choosing.

Texts written during the 'After the Bomb' period can typically be defined by their questioning of morality and existentialism of the human condition, which often relates to the interplay between the personal and political spheres of an individual's life, and hence reflect the loss of morality and futility in humanity's actions. The paradigmatic shift that occurred as a result of the callous dropping of the atomic bomb, certainly did have an indisputable damaging effect on an individual's ways of thinking. Samuel Beckett's absurdist tragicomedy Waiting for Godot (1953) deeply explores an existential questioning of the human condition in a post-war world. Similarly shown through Stanley Kubrick's black humour film Doctor Strangelove (1964) depicts a more satirical understanding and questioning with regards to the progression of technology within the context of a looming nuclear war. Likewise, evident throughout Stanley Kubrick's satirical anti-war film Full Metal Jacket (1987), highlights the psychological challenges put on individuals during the time period through absurdity and preposterous imagery. However, shown throughout Sylvia Plath's Ariel suite of confessional poetry, specifically, The Applicant (1962) and Lady Lazarus (1965) manage to accurately adopt a more feminine voice and approach but still highlight how individuals are subject to firm expectations and can be induced to develop a sense of conflict between the personal and political spheres of life. As scholar Elizabeth Bolick stated, "human beings solely as individual creatures" represents how an individual's identity and way of thinking can be affected in such a way to induce a sense of self uncertainty and a clash between the two spheres of their life.

Beckett's Waiting for Godot (1953) is able to deeply examine and explore an existential way of thinking whilst questioning the absurdist nature of society and human condition after the bomb. As a result of the callous dropping of the atomic bomb to mark the end of WWII, the existence of God was consequently questioned by society. As shown through the opening of the play, Vladimir and Estragon's desperate pleas for 'help' pose a stark contrast to the tight mouth of 'nothing to be done', which highlights the futility of humanity's actions within a broken world. Through this, it is relatively clear to
