How to be an ethical consumer of fish

Until now, only a few fisheries have been awarded the coveted blue label by the Marine Stewardship Council (MSC). Mackerel from the North Sea, and off Cornwall and Hastings, have met the eco-credentials of sustainability and traceability from sea to fork.

Determined consumers could track the catch from trawlers taking part in the 'responsible fishing scheme' run by the Sea Fish Industry Authority, although it is mainly aimed at ensuring a sustainable approach elsewhere in the supply chain – wholesalers and supermarkets, for instance.

The MSC's Fishonline website suggests fish to avoid include Atlantic cod, halibut and wild salmon and beam-trawled brill and turbot from the North Sea. Organically farmed salmon is fine, as are black bream, sea bream and flounder from Cornish waters or off the north and north-west coast of Wales.

Much of the fish eaten in Loch Fyne restaurants, an outlet praised recently by Ethical Consumer magazine, comes from inshore trawlers off the Cornish coast or ports and fish farms in Iceland and Norway.

Benson's Foods is one of the fastest-growing canned fish brands in the UK. It supplies retailers and supermarkets across the UK. Benson's sales rose by more than 40% in 2012.

Fish products bought from overseas need to be as fresh as possible before they are canned. Any payment delays to foreign suppliers could prove costly to Benson's as exchange rates can change dramatically at any time.

As consumer food prices are generally increasing, it is vital that Benson's remains competitive on price to continue its business growth.
