Learning a non-native language in a naturalistic environment: Insights from behavioural and neuroimaging research

Christos Pliatsikas,Vicky Chondrogianni,2015-09-02 It is largely accepted in the relevant literature that successful learning of one or more non native languages is affected by a number of factors that are independent of the target language s per se these factors include the age of acquisition AoA of the target language s the type and amount of formal instruction the learners have received as well as the amount of language use that the learners demonstrate Recent experimental evidence suggests that one crucial factor for efficient native like performance in the non native language is the amount of naturalistic exposure or immersion that the learners receive to that language This can be broadly defined as the degree to which language learners use their non native language outside the classroom and for their day to day activities and usually presupposes that the learners live in an environment where their non native language is exclusively or mostly used Existing literature has suggested that linguistic immersion can be beneficial for lexical and semantic acquisition in a non native language as well as for non native morphological and syntactic processing More recent evidence has also suggested that naturalistic learning of a non native language can also have an impact on the patterns of brain activity underlying language processing as well as on the structure of brain regions that are involved expressed as changes in the grey matter structure This Research Topic brings together studies on the effects of learning and speaking a non native language in a naturalistic environment These include more efficient or native like processing in behavioural tasks tapping on language lexicon morphology syntax as well as changes in the brain structure and function as revealed by neuroimaging studies
