34ff Corn Lp Biofuels Journal:

Compendium of Bioenergy Plants Stephen L. Goldman, Chittaranjan Kole, 2016-04-19 This book evaluates maize as a bioenergy fuel source from two perspectives It explores whether the input energy needed to generate fuel significantly exceeded by the energy harvested In examining this issue the chapters provide assessments of the social economic and political impact on fuel pricing food costs and the environmental challenge Fuel Production from Non-Food Biomass Barnabas Gikonyo, 2015-05-05 This title includes a number of Open Access chapters The practice of converting corn to ethanol is controversial with debates currently being raged in both public policy and science While biofuels from corn have important implications in alleviating some of the global energy crisis critics argue that it takes away from vital agricultural production

Increasing Feedstock Production for Biofuels Gale Buchanan, 2010-10 A large expansion in ethanol production along with research and innovation to develop second generation biofuels is underway in the U S spurred by volatile oil prices and energy policies This increased focus on ethanol and other biofuels is an important element of U S economic energy environmental and national security policies This report will inform research recommendations to address the constraints surrounding availability of biomass feedstocks To meet this goal an economic assessment which links to an analysis of the consequences for greenhouse gas emissions and sustainability has been developed that encompasses feedstock production from agriculture and forestry sources Illustrations Ethanol and Corn Marilyn C. Walchuck, 2011 U S policy to expand the production of biofuel for domestic energy use has significant implications for agriculture and resource use While ongoing research and development investment may radically alter the way biofuel is produced in the future for now corn based ethanol continues to account for most biofuel production As corn ethanol production increases so does the production of corn The effect on agricultural commodity markets has been national but commodity production adjustments and resulting environmental consequences vary across regions Changes in the crop sector have also affected the cost of feed for livestock producers As the Nation demands more biofuel production and markets for new biofuel feedstocks such as crop residues emerge the agricultural landscape will be further transformed This book explores the changes and expanding usage of ethanol and corn biofuels Red, White, and Green Jane Earley, 2009 Rapid growth in biofuels use in the past five years has contributed to a sharp increase in food feed grain and soybean prices in the United States and abroad Biofuels and Vertical Price Transmission Dusan Drabik, Pavel Ciaian, Jan Pokrivcak, 2014 Agriculture-Based Biofuels Randy Schnepf, 2013-07 Since the late 1970s U S policymakers at both the federal and state levels have authorized a variety of incentives regulations and programs to encourage the production and use of agriculture based biofuels i e any fuel produced from biological materials Initially federal biofuels policies were developed to help kick start the biofuels industry during its early development when neither production capacity nor a market for the finished product was widely available Federal policy e g tax credits import tariffs grants loans and loan guarantees has played a key role in helping to close the price gap between biofuels and cheaper petroleum fuels. Now as the industry has evolved other policy goals e.g. national energy security, climate change concerns, support for rural economies are cited by proponents as justification for continuing or enhancing federal policy support. The U.S. biofuels sector responded to these government incentives by expanding output every year from 1980 through 2011, with the exception of 1996, with important implications for the domestic and international food and fuel sectors. Production of the primary U.S. biofuel ethanol derived from corn starch has risen from about 175 million gallons in 1980 to nearly 14 billion gallons in 2011. U.S. biodiesel production derived primarily from vegetable oil, albeit much smaller, has also shown strong growth, rising from 0.5 million gallons in 1999 to a record 969 million gallons in 2012. Despite the rapid growth of the past decades, total agriculture-based biofuels consumption accounted for only about 8% of U.S. transportation fuel consumption: 9.7% of gasoline and 1.5% of diesel in 2012. Federal biofuels policies have had costs, including unintended market and environmental consequences and large federal outlays estimated at $7.7 billion in 2011 but declining to $1.3 billion in 2012 with the expiration of the ethanol blender's tax credit. Despite the direct and indirect costs of federal biofuels policy and the relatively small role of biofuels as an energy source, the U.S. biofuels sector continues to push for federal involvement. But critics of federal policy intervention in the biofuels sector have also emerged. Current issues and policy developments related to the U.S. biofuels sector that are of interest to Congress include: Many federal biofuels policies require routine congressional monitoring and occasional reconsideration in the form of reauthorization or new appropriations. The 10% ethanol to gasoline blend ratio, known as the blend wall, poses a barrier to expansion of ethanol use. The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) issued waivers to allow ethanol blending of up to 15% per gallon of gasoline for use in model year 2001 and newer light-duty motor vehicles. However, the limitation to newer vehicles coupled with infrastructure issues could limit rapid expansion of blending rates. The slow development of cellulosic biofuels has raised concerns about the industry's ability to meet large federal usage mandates, which in turn has raised the potential for future EPA waivers of mandated biofuel volumes and has contributed to a cycle of slow investment in and development of the sector. In 2012, the expiration of the blender tax credit, poor profit margins due primarily to high corn prices, and the emerging blend wall limitation have contributed to a drop-off in ethanol production and have generated considerable uncertainty about the ethanol industry's future.
