Disability Condition	Implications/Adaptations
Autism- Autism is a brain development disorder characterized as having difficulties in social interactions, verbal and nonverbal communication and repetitive behaviors also including difficulties in motor coordination and attention. This disorder is very common in the United States infecting 1 in 88 children and grows every year.	First I will have to remember that he can't talk, so I should use hand motions, cards and to repeat my cues to help communicate with him. He also has his rituals that he does every day and if something is done out of the ordinary he gets frustrated, so I will alter activities that he does already, to make them a little more challenging. He also has limited motion and has difficulties with coordination, so during some activities help guide him to certain objects, such as the medicine ball and on the balance beams.

Degree of Assistance/Support Needed: Describe any physical and/or technological assistance or support your individual(s) will need in order to successfully complete your lesson/activity. Include personnel assistance beyond yourself, when appropriate.

Disability Condition	Degree of Assistance
Autism	Assistance from Para and myself while on the balance beam Pads upright to be placed around the balance beam for him to hold onto Assistance if a medicine ball is a little too heavy to pick up

Individual(s) Objectives:

Cognitive: Harley will be able to think of and use different strategies to pick up and roll the medicine balls

Harley will be able to think of different ways to balance his body on the 2x4 piece of inclined wood and on the outdoor playground equipment.

Psychomotor: Harley will be able to walk across an inclined 2 by 4 piece of wood by himself, with mats placed around him.

Harley will be able to pick up 5 pound medicine balls, place them in the grocery cart and take 4 laps throughout the halls with the medicine balls placed in the grocery cart.

Affective: Harley will be able to improve his balance and muscular strength to progress his mobility and coordination in the future.
