

American Revolution Essay

American Revolution One of the most important facets of any revolution is violence. This is often a response to the heightened repression or other intolerable demands from the government against its people. The American Revolution is no exception. Following the Seven Years War, England need to recover some of their finances which were lost due to the war.

Parliament achieved this by the taxation of the American colonies; the Stamp Act of 1765 is an example of this. This act resulted in outrage from the Colonies and led to rioting, rhetoric, and the formation of the Stamp Act Congress. These actions quickly led to the repeal of the Stamp Act; however, there were numerous new taxes levied to take their place. The Americans continued to show more content.

Like Britain's two loyal colonies; Florida and Quebec. At the time of the Revolutionary War, there were in actuality fifteen British colonies in America; Florida and Quebec being the two constantly left out. In 1774 England passed the Quebec Act. This Act made Quebec the fourteenth American colony. Quebec's loyalty was put to the test within a year of the passing of the Act. The rebelling "original" thirteen colonies sent two armies north to capture and utilized the Quebecian territory. Quebec's militia had just enough warning to organize its garrison against the forces of Benedict Arnold. In midwinter of 1775 Arnold's attempt to take seige of the garrison was put asunder when he was wounded by Quebec's militia. By the following Spring the attacking forces retreated—and the battles at Quebec's garrison would be the first and last American Revolution battles fought on Canadian soil.

Unlike Canada, Britain gained control of Florida in 1763 in exchange for Cuba, which was captured from Spain during the Seven Years' War. With British rule looming in the future, most of the Spanish residence which inhabited Florida left, leaving Florida virtually bare. The British did not take into account the large populations of Indians and blacks which shared the colony with them. The only two cities with more than a handful of white residence were Pensacola and St. Augustine. These two cities would become the heart of the new "Floridas".

Parliament split, the then larger
