

Chapter 12 - The Age of Reform

Abby Kelley

The Reform Impulse

- Utopian Communities
  - About 100 reform communities were established in the decades before the Civil War
  - Nearly all the communities set out to recognize society on a cooperative basis, hoping to restore social harmony to a world of excessive individualism, and to narrow the widening gap between rich and poor
    - Socialism and communism entered the language
- The Shakers
  - The Shakers were the most successful of the religious communities and had a significant impact on the outside world
  - Shakers believed men and women were spiritually equal
  - They abandoned private property and traditional family life
    - Celibacy
- Oneida
  - The founder of Oneida, John Noyes, preached that he and his followers had become so perfect that they had achieved a state of complete "purity of heart," or sinlessness
  - Noyes and followers abandoned private property and traditional family life
    - Complex marriage
  - Oneida was an extremely dictatorial environment
- Worldly Communities
  - New England transcendentalists established Brook Farm to demonstrate that manual and intellectual could coexist harmoniously
  - Although it was an exciting miniature university, Brook Farm failed in part because many intellectuals disliked farm labor
- The Owenites
  - The most important secular communitarian was Robert Owenites
  - Owen promoted communitarianism as a peaceful means of ensuring that workers received the full value of their labor
  - At New Harmony, Owen championed women's rights and education
  - Other short lived secular communities included those established by Joseph Warren
- Religion and Reform
  - Some reform movements drew their inspiration from the religious revivalism of the Second Great Awakening
  - The revivals popularized the outlook known as "perfectionism," which saw both individuals and society at large as capable of indefinite improvement
