

Identities in Extended Afrikaans Speech Communities

University of Johannesburg, South Africa

ABSTRACT

This study investigates the link between language and identity in a few enclaved Afrikaans speaking communities where ascribed identities, i.e. the role of 'self' as opposed to 'the other', is particularly salient. Given the role of both 'self-identification' and the perceptions and attitudes of 'others' in the construction of (ethnic) identity the aim of this study is to understand the processes of identity construction and negotiation that resulted in these communities either distancing themselves from their black heritage or viewing themselves as 'Black Afrikaners'.

Four such communities are investigated namely the Buys family, who represents a group that rejects their black heritage and the Van der Merwe family, the people of Tlhabane and the black Afrikaners of Onverwacht who represent the latter grouping.

Neville Alexander's work is drawn upon in which he argues that identity politics in South Africa is often cladded in ornamental rainbow imagery leaving many communities in a crisis of identity.

Keywords: Afrikaans, language and identity, identity construction and negotiation, linguistic diversity.

1. INTRODUCTION

South Africa is a diverse society where more than 30 languages are spoken on a daily basis¹. Its language diversity is supported by arguably one of the most inclusive constitutional language provisions on the African continent, i.e. its 'Language Clause', which is one of six 'founding provisions' of the Constitution that enshrines multilingualism and entrenches equal rights for 11 of the main languages used by the majority of South Africans (99% of the population). These languages are English and 10 indigenous languages, Afrikaans and the Bantu languages Sepedi, Sesotho, Setswana, Tshivenda, Xitsonga, siSwati, isiNdebele, isiXhosa, and isiZulu. In addition, the language clause is supported by the Bill of ¹ In addition to the official languages, this figure includes indigenous languages such as Khoe and Nama languages, 'heritage' languages such as Dutch, French, Greek, Portuguese, Cantonese, Italian, Gujarati, Tamil and Telegu, as well as indigenous languages from neighbouring countries (e.g. Shona), according to Ethnologue (2014).

B. Bekker, Anne Leildé, 2006 Identity has become the watchword of our times In sub Saharan Africa this certainly appears to be true and for particular reasons Africa is urbanising rapidly cross border migration streams are swelling and globalising influences sweep across the continent Africa is also facing up to the challenge of nurturing emergent democracies in which citizens often feel torn between older traditional and newer national loyalties Accordingly collective identities are deeply coloured by recent urban as well as international experience and are squarely located within identity politics where reconciliation is required between state nation building strategies and sub national affiliations They are also fundamentally shaped by the growing inequality and the poverty found on this continent These themes are explored by an international set of scholars in two South African and two Francophone cities The relative importance to urban residents of race class and ethnicity but also of work space and language are compared in these cities This volume also includes a chapter investigating the emergence of a continental African identity A recent report of the Office of the South African President claims that a strong national identity is emerging among its citizens and that race and ethnicity are waning whilst a class identity is in the ascendance The evidence and analyses within this volume serve to gauge the extent to which such claims ring true in what everyone knows is a much more complex and shifting terrain of shared meanings than can ever be captured by such generalisations
