Undead Theories David Geelan, 2006-01-01 Theory is dead long live theory In this collection of linked essays David Geelan explores the contentious relationship between theory and research in education The first chapter proclaims the death of theory in educational research but the remainder of the book explores a number of the ways in which theory survives and thrives A commitment to conducting educational research that directly serves students and teachers and that changes the life in classrooms through negotiation and collaboration not through prescription requires new tools and new ways of using them Such tools include narrative modes of conducting and representing research as well as a disciplined eclecticism that emphasises choosing and using competing theories in intentional ways Metaphorical descriptions from the philosophy of science particularly Kuhn and Popper have been influential in science education David explores the value of such perspectives and argues that although they have offered important insights for science education their use has also forced other perspectives into blindness In the contexts of research methodology educational philosophy science education and educational technology David talks about new places to stand and ways to look but more importantly gives specific examples of the ways in which these methodological tools and philosophical perspectives have been used in his own teaching and research practices

Teaching as Learning Jean McNiff, 2006-04-14 In this fascinating and very personal book Jean McNiff author of the successful Action Research Principles and Practice argues that educational knowledge is created by individual teachers as they attempt to express their own values in their professional lives Working with case studies of actual practice she looks again at the familiar action research paradigm of identifying a problem imagining implementing and evaluating a solution and modifying practice in the light of that evaluation She gives practical advice on how working in this way can aid the professional development of action researcher and practitioner alike She concludes that the best teaching is done by those who want to learn and who can show others how to be open to their own processes of self development
