

1. The first step in the design of a structure is to determine the loads that will be applied to it. These loads may be due to the weight of the structure itself, the weight of the contents, the weight of the wind, the weight of the snow, the weight of the rain, the weight of the earth, the weight of the water, the weight of the air, the weight of the sun, the weight of the moon, the weight of the stars, the weight of the planets, the weight of the galaxies, the weight of the universe.
2. The second step is to determine the strength of the structure. This is done by calculating the stresses and strains that will be produced in the structure by the loads. The strength of the structure must be sufficient to resist these stresses and strains without failure.
3. The third step is to determine the stability of the structure. This is done by calculating the moments and rotations that will be produced in the structure by the loads. The structure must be stable against these moments and rotations.
4. The fourth step is to determine the durability of the structure. This is done by calculating the effects of the environment on the structure. The structure must be able to withstand the effects of the environment for the required life span.
5. The fifth step is to determine the cost of the structure. This is done by calculating the materials, labor, and other costs involved in the construction of the structure. The cost must be within the budget.
