

JavaScript for Acrobat can be placed in a variety of locations, both external to the document, and within the document. This chapter discusses how to determine the appropriate location for a script, and how to create and access the scripts.

Topic	Description	See
The concept of a JavaScript event	A brief description of an event and how they are triggered.	page 40
About contexts	Discusses the placement of scripts at the folder, document, page, field and batch levels.	page 41
Privileged versus non-privileged context	A discussion of the execution of methods in a privileged context, and how to work around these security restrictions.	page 45

The concept of a JavaScript event

All scripts are executed in response to a particular event. There are several types of events:

- App
When the Viewer is started, the Application Initialization Event occurs. Script files, called Folder Level JavaScripts, are read in from the application and user JavaScript folders. See "Folder level" on page 42 for additional details.
- Batch
A batch event occurs during the processing of each document of a batch sequence.
- Bookmark
This event occurs whenever a user clicks on a bookmark that executes a script.
- Console
A console event occurs whenever a user evaluates a script in the console. See "Executing JavaScript" on page 22.
- Doc
This event is triggered whenever a document level event occurs. For more information, see "Document level" on page 43.
- External
This event is the result of an external access, for example, through OLE, AppleScript, or loading an FDF
- field
This event is triggered when the user interacts with an Acrobat form, see "Field level" on page 44 for more information.
- Link
This event is triggered when a link containing a JavaScript action is activated by the user.
- Menu
A menu event occurs whenever JavaScript that has been attached to a menu item is executed. In Acrobat 5.0 and later, the user can add a menu item and associate JavaScript actions with it.
