Turning onto the campus proper, Dr. Gerhartt mentally organized his day into 20-minute blocks. Answering email was relegated to the minutes between 9:20 and 9:40, and then again between 1:40 and 2:00, with no leeway for distraction at any other time. His secretary's memos required an entire block of their own (9:00-9:20), but at least after that, they would be done with. Aside from a 40-minute break for lunch, and a 1-hour departmental meeting in the afternoon, he could preserve the entire remaining workday for his precious experimental work. With a brief glance at his watch, he swept briskly through the door to his office, and glanced around in satisfaction: all his machinery lined the walls, meticulously clean and exactly as he had left it. His day's work could begin.

Based on this passage, it would be reasonable to conclude that Dr. Gerhartt values....

- ☐ Precision and organization
- ☐ Creativity and spontaneity
- ☐ Verbal over written communication
- ☐ Digital over analog clocks
- ☐ Personal artistic expression

According to the passage, Dr. Gerhartt views the task of handling his secretary's memos as....

- ☐ Exciting and stimulating
- ☐ More important than his experimental work
- ☐ Impossibly difficult
- ☐ Entirely unpredictable
- ☐ Unpleasant but necessary

3.

Sophie had barely seen London as a child. Whisked along through the streets, clinging to her mother's hand, she'd formed the impression that the whole great metropolis was largely populated by knees and boots in varying states of dampness. The only place she remembered clearly was their house, where she spent hours in her room, pressed up against the drafty window as the late-autumn chill seeped through the glass. Despite the cold, she could never tear herself away from that window, because on the street below, the tiny butcher's shop hummed with activity. Watching from her window she could finally see what life was actually like in this strange new city where she'd suddenly been set down.

The fact that Sophie "could never tear herself away from that window" demonstrates her....

- ☐ Desire to learn about London
- ☐ Curiosity about her new house
- ☐ Feeling that she is too old for her mother's protectiveness
- ☐ Unwillingness to endure cold temperatures
- ☐ Eagerness to visit the butcher's shop
