Closet Writing/Gay Reading James Creech, 1993 One of the most urgent tasks for gay studies today James Creech argues is the retrieval of a repressed closeted literary heritage But contradictions and problems cloud even the most basic theoretical questions What does a lesbian or gay reading of a literary text require or presume Can we talk about a homosexual writer expressing him or herself before the invention of homosexuality Was it possible for a writer like Herman Melville for example to create literary works linked to his own prohibited eros In Closet Writing Gay Reading Creech shows how a literary critic can be receptive to implicit and closeted sexual content Forcefully advocating a tactic of identification and projection in literary analysis he lends renewed currency to the kind of sentimental response to literature that continental theory particularly deconstruction has sought to discredit In the second half of his book Creech sets out to analyze what he considers the exemplary novel of the nineteenth century closet Melville's Pierre or The Ambiguities By approaching Pierre as the gay man Melville longed to have as its reader Creech is able to decipher the novel's encrypted erotics and to reveal that Melville's apparent tale of incest is actually a homosexual novel in disguise. The closeted address to queer sensitive readers that Pierre disseminates finally receives a critical reading that strives to be explicit, shareable, and public.

Culture, Diaspora, and Modernity in Muslim Writing Rehana Ahmed, Peter Morey, Amina Yaqin, 2012. Fiction by writers of Muslim background forms one of the most diverse, vibrant, and high profile corpora of work being produced today from the trail-blazing writing of Salman Rushdie and Hanif Kureishi, which challenged political and racial orthodoxies in the 1980s, to that of a new generation including Mohsin Hamid, Nadeem Aslam, and Kamila Shamsie. This collection reflects the variety of those fictions. Experts in English South Asian and postcolonial literatures address the nature of Muslim identity, its response to political realignments since the 1980s, its tensions between religious and secular models of citizenship, and its manifestation of these tensions as conflict between generations. In considering the perceptions of Muslims, contributors also explore the roles of immigration, class, gender, and national identity, as well as the impact of 9/11. This volume includes essays on contemporary fiction by writers of Muslim origin and non-Muslims writing about Muslims. It aims to push beyond the habitual populist framing of Muslims as strangers or interlopers whose ways and beliefs are at odds with those of modernity, exposing the hidden conservative assumptions that underpin such perspectives. While returning to themes that are of particular significance to diasporic Muslim cultures, such as secularism, modernity, multiculturalism, and citizenship, the essays reveal that Muslim writing grapples with the same big questions as serve to exercise all writers and intellectuals at the present time: How does one reconcile the impulses of the individual with the requirements of community? How can one belong in the modern world? What is the role of art in making sense of chaotic contemporary experience? The French Review

James Frederick Mason, Hélène Harvitt, 1976. Transatlantic Literature and Culture After 9/11 K. Miller, 2014-09-23. Transatlantic Literature and Culture After 9/11 asks whether post-9/11 America has chosen the wrong side of paradise by waging war on terror rather than working for global peace. Analyzing transatlantic literature and culture, the book refocuses our view of Ground Zero through the lenses of imperial power and cosmopolitan exchange. Resources in Education, 1994.
