Literary Analysis Sample Ready

Perspective. The way in which you view a subject or idea. The simple word perspective helps define the topic in "From Excerptation: A Life" and Boy's Life. "From Excerptation: A Life" is a story in which an animal born into the world in cage and has his first taste of freedom. He experiences both pain and sheer joy which make up life behind bars. In the end, he decides to stay free even when he has the opportunity to go back to his original cage which has provided him comfort. Boy's Life is a much lighter animal story which revolves around Cory Mackerson, a normal first world child, whose idea of freedom is the classic summer vacation. Both texts have a very different perspective on freedom which contributes to the overall topic of freedom.

In Boy's Life, Mackerson's view of freedom is the superficial summer vacation every child dreams of. The author describes the time spent in school dramatically using words like "have mercy" or "injection." This correlates with his viewpoint on enslavement that dictates throughout the whole text. Mrs. Neville is constantly droning on about the last day of school, and this makes Cory even more impatient. In addition, the ticking of the clock is clearly emphasized through his anticipation of the last minutes of class. The text states, "Tick, Tick, Tick, Time, the king of cruelty." The ticking is loud in his head, further teasing him about not starting summer vacation. This is important because it shows how this is just an obstacle that he has to pull through to gain his freedom. We know the teacher is very sincere, but all the students care about is getting out of the "prison." When Cory finally gains his freedom after seemingly a lifetime wait, he states, "I ran out the corridor, my arms unencumbered by books, my mind unencumbered by facts and figures,
