Edison & Franklin

Today I am going to compare two great inventors from our past: Thomas Edison and Benjamin Franklin. You would be hard-pressed to find any elementary-aged student who didn't recognize these two names, but in case you don't, here is a fast introduction. Thomas Edison lived from 1847 to 1931; he is most famous for inventing the light bulb. Benjamin Franklin lived from 1706 to 1790, and he is credited with discovering electricity.

Both men were inventors, and both were born in the United States. As children, both Franklin and Edison had limited schooling, which didn't seem to affect how smart they became later on. Both inventors are said to have self-taught themselves mostly through their love of reading. They are each credited with dozens of inventions that are still used today. Franklin and Edison were both interested in electricity, and I think they would have had a lot to talk about if they had ever met face-to-face.

They were different too though. They lived in very different times. While Benjamin Franklin discovered electricity, it was still such a new thing that he didn't do much with it afterwards. Instead, he put his inventing energy into other cool things like swim-fins and bifocals and musical instruments. Edison was mostly about electricity all the time. His inventions and discoveries all required electrical currents: light bulbs, microphones, phonographs, fluoroscopes, etc. They had different religions too. Edison's religious beliefs have been said to be that of the "Free Thinkers," which means he believed science and logic should be taken into account when explaining religion. Franklin's parents wanted him to be a very religious person, but when he discovered deism, he began to move away from organized religion.

I have tried to show you how Thomas Edison and Benjamin Franklin were similar and different in this essay. Oh, another difference! While Benjamin Franklin ended up on the hundred dollar bill, Edison never did, but he ended up with a lot more of those bills in his pocket!

A Comparative Study of Writing Abilities in Two Modes at the Grade 5, 8, and 12 Levels Ian Pringle, Aviva Freedman, Ontario. Ministry of Education, Ontario. Ministry of Colleges and Universities, 1985 The third of three studies involving a comparative analysis of transactional and narrative writing of selected samples of students in two Ontario districts this study addressed questions arising from the earlier studies and examined the writing skills of students in grades 5, 8, and 12 Writing samples were examined for conformity to the norms of story structure and argumentation and the subject matter of the transactional writing was analyzed The level of affective development manifested in subsamples of both the stories and the arguments was rated All the papers in the sample were analyzed for syntactic complexity scores and for mechanical and conventional errors Comparisons of the first and second versions of the papers were made to assess skills in revising and editing Findings indicated the need of students to learn how to write an argument and to revise a paper Other implications were 1 that since the level of difficulty of one aspect of a writing task may decrease the lack of control in another teachers must take into account the nature of difficulties in the tasks they set students and make their assessments accordingly 2 that students at all levels should be given occasions to write narratives 3 that the model of persuasive discourse should be countered and 4 that writing strategies recommended by authorities need to be implemented EL
