The amount of fuel to be injected is determined by the injection pulse duration as well as by a pressure difference between fuel pressure and intake manifold vacuum pressure. The E.C.C.S. control unit controls only the injection pulse duration. For this reason, the pressure difference between the fuel pressure and intake manifold vacuum pressure should be maintained at a constant level. Since the intake manifold vacuum pressure varies with engine operating conditions, a pressure regulator is placed in the fuel line to regulate the fuel pressure in response to changes in the intake manifold vacuum pressure.

A pressure regulator control system is incorporated in the E.C.C.S. system to cut the manifold pressure supply to the pressure regulator under certain conditions when starting and for up to 3 minutes after starting. For operating details refer to page EF-58.
