Perspectives on Essential Health Benefits Institute of Medicine, Board on Health Care Services, Committee on Defining and Revising an Essential Health Benefits Package for Qualified Health Plans, 2012-01-10 The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act herein known as the Affordable Care Act ACA was signed into law on March 23 2010 Several provisions of the law went into effect in 2010 including requirements to cover children up to age 26 and to prohibit insurance companies from denying coverage based on preexisting conditions for children Other provisions will go into effect during 2014 including the requirement for all individuals to purchase health insurance In 2014 insurance purchasers will be allowed but not obliged to buy their coverage through newly established health insurance exchanges HIEs marketplaces designed to make it easier for customers to comparison shop among plans and for low and moderate income individuals to obtain public subsidies to purchase private health insurance The exchanges will offer a choice of private health plans and all plans must include a standard core set of covered benefits called essential health benefits EHBs The Department of Health and Human Services requested that the Institute of Medicine IOM recommend criteria and methods for determining and updating the EHBs In response the IOM convened two workshops in 2011 where experts from federal and state government as well as employers insurers providers consumers and health care researchers were asked to identify current methods for determining medical necessity and share decision making approaches to determining which benefits would be covered and other benefit design practices Essential Health Benefits summarizes the presentations in this workshop The committee's recommendations will be released in a subsequent report

Assessing Genomic Sequencing Information for Health Care Decision Making Institute of Medicine, Board on Health Sciences Policy, Roundtable on Translating Genomic-Based Research for Health, 2014-08-19 Rapid advances in technology have lowered the cost of sequencing an individual's genome from the several billion dollars that it cost a decade ago to just a few thousand dollars today and have correspondingly greatly expanded the use of genomic information in medicine Because of the lack of evidence available for assessing variants evaluation bodies have made only a few recommendations for the use of genetic tests in health care For example organizations such as the Evaluation of Genomic Applications in Practice and Prevention working group have sought to set standards for the kinds of evaluations needed to make population level health decisions However due to insufficient evidence it has been challenging to recommend the use of a genetic test An additional challenge to using large scale sequencing in the clinic is that it may uncover secondary or incidental findings genetic variants that have been associated with a disease but that are not necessarily related to the conditions that led to the decision to use genomic testing Furthermore as more genetic variants are associated with diseases new information becomes available about

genomic tests performed previously which raises issues about how and whether to return this information to physicians and patients and also about who is responsible for the information To help develop a better understanding of how genomic information is used for healthcare decision making the Roundtable on Translating Genomic Based Research for Health of the Institute of Medicine held a workshop in Washington DC in February 2014 Stakeholders including clinicians researchers patients and government officials discussed the issues related to the use of genomic information in medical practice

Assessing Genomic Sequencing Information for Health Care Decision Making is the summary of that workshop This report compares and contrasts evidence evaluation processes for different clinical indications and discusses key challenges in the evidence evaluation process Health Research and Policy Act United States.
