

- _____ 10. Now you turn your attention to the daughter cells being _____ 11. formed by the division of another stem cell. They are small _____ 12. round cells with relatively large round nuclei. In fact, their _____ 13. cytoplasm is very sparse. You record your observation of the _____ 14. formation of (10). They do not remain in the marrow very _____ 15. long after formation but seem to enter the circulation almost _____ 16. as soon as they are produced. Some of those cells produce _____ 17. (11) or act in other ways in the immune response. At this _____ 18. point, although you have yet to see the formation of (12), _____ 19. (13), (14), or (15), you decide to proceed into the cir-_____ 20. culation to make the blood-clotting observations.
_____ 21.
_____ 22. You maneuver yourself into a small venule to enter the gen-_____ 23. eral circulation. Once inside, you quickly make a slash in the _____ 24. vessel lining, or (16). Almost immediately, what appear to _____ 25. be hundreds of jagged cell fragments swoop into the area and platelet themselves over the freshly made incision. You record that (17) have just adhered to the damaged site. As you are writing, your chemical monitor flashes the message, "vasoconstrictor substance released." You record that (18) has been released based on your observation that the vessel wall seems to be closing in. Peering out at the damaged site, you see that long ropelike strands are being formed at a rapid rate and are clinging to the site. You report that the (19) mesh is forming and is beginning to trap RBCs to form the basis of the (20). Even though you do not have the equipment to monitor the intermediate steps of this process, you know that the interaction of platelet  $PF_3$  and other clotting factors must have generated (21), which then converted (22) to (23).
This second enzyme then joined the soluble (24) molecules together to form the network of strands you can see.

You carefully back away from the newly formed clot. You do not want to disturb the area because you realize that if the clot detaches, it might become a life-threatening (25). Your mission here is completed, and you return to the entrance site.
