

Rose Symbolism in "A Rose for Emily"

"A Rose for Emily," written by William Faulkner in 1931, present marvelous characters like Emily, Homer, and the Townspeople's resemblances by the suggestive and connotative use of a rose as the major metaphor. However, as the story progresses, one feels that, this metaphor's purpose reveals their mutual differences. This is fitting because Emily appears to be moral and respectable people on the surface; however, by delving deeper into the short story one uncovers her true nature, a miserable, unfriendly, and insane person. Her path coincides with Homer's as their paths both strike a remarkable resemblance to that of a rose's. Best described as immortal, the townspeople are shown as being pretty from far but far from pretty. From afar, Faulkner chooses the rose to represent Emily because she appears reserved and would never harm anything or anyone. One can see Emily's reclusive and subdued persona when the tax collectors come to her house, "She did not ask them to sit. She just stood in the door and listened quietly until the spokesman came to a stumbling halt" (426). Although she seemed peaceful, one can ascertain never to judge a book by its cover. Emily is truly traumatized by her father's death and would not accept the fact that her father has left her permanently for another few days and due to that mental disparity, she devises a way to keep Homer with her permanently, even though he would not be alive. (Wallace, 106-7) Such as a rose has thorns when examined closely, so Emily displays this same attribute in her own life. When people came to get her father, she said to them, "Miss Emily met them at the door, dressed as usual and with no trace of grief on her face. She told them that her father was not dead" (428) When people gave her their condolences, she would reject them as a result of denying the otherwise obvious truth. Her father's death was a disturbing experience and ever since that day, she has had problems letting go and is scared to lose another loved one. (Schwab, 215-17) This obsession with never freeing herself from another person is one of her many major faults. From this flaw, emerges a new vigorous thorn. Due to this psychological imbalance of not being able to let go, she decides to poison her next love, Homer Barron. Homer inspects Emily and finds a 'special' poisonous thorn that pierces him and ends his life: her insanity. Unfortunately, she is obsessed because she fears that he will leave her as her father and all male figures had in her life had. Her refusal to let go of loved ones drives her towards insanity. The reader sees a side of her that is completely unexpected when she says to the pharmacist, "I want some poison," she said to the druggist. She was over thirty then, still a slight woman, though thinner than usual, with cold, haughty black eyes in a face the flesh of which was strained across the temples and about the eye sockets as you imagine a lighthouse-keeper's face ought to look. "I want so
