Four elements of design to be credited:

- Type of observation with justification – e.g. covert or overt, naturalistic, participant or non-participant and why
- Operationalised behavioural categories – detail of at least two specific and observable behaviours to be recorded. This must go beyond the idea of global constructs such as exercising, socialising, use of other facilities
- Use of time and/or event sampling with justification – recordings can take place at specified time intervals (time sampling) e.g. every minute or as the behaviour occurs (event sampling) e.g. number of times interaction occurs with another gym member. The type(s) of sampling must be appropriate for the behaviours chosen
- How reliability of the data collection could be assessed, inter-observer reliability e.g. using two observers/raters and comparing separate recordings; statistical comparison (correlation) of data from both observers/raters, intra-observer reliability e.g. checking video recordings.
