

Tornadoes

Tornadoes, put simply, are rotating columns of air. These wind storms originate from strong thunderstorms. Inside the thunderstorm, warm air rises from the ground at the same time that cool air, such as rain or hail, is falling. This difference between the warm and cool air causes rotational winds. The rotating winds can move vertically and come down from the cloud toward the ground, causing a tornado.

Tornadoes create dangerous conditions when they touch down. The swirling column of air can pick up objects lying on the ground, like bikes or scooters, and make them flying projectiles. The wind from a tornado can also destroy sheds, bridges, pull up trees, and send cars airborne. The largest storms can dislodge roofs and lift mobile homes! Tornadoes can last from a few seconds to a few hours.

There are several different types of tornadoes. Some are small, like waterspouts forming over water or rope tornadoes, which are thin and form over land. Others are much larger, such as a wedge tornado, which can cover ground quickly and have extremely high wind speeds.
