ORANGUTANS AND THE RAINY, HOT RAINFOREST

Orangutans are large, orange mammals that live in the rainforests of Southeast Asia. These rainforests are very hot and rainy, which is why they are called tropical rainforests. The temperature in these places can be as high as 80°F (27°C) during the day! Rain is also very common, and it can rain almost every day. Orangutans have thick, orange fur that helps them stay safe and warm in the rain. They live in the tall trees of the forest, where they build nests out of branches to sleep in.

The rainforests where orangutans live are full of tall trees, vines, and plants. These forests are so humid that the air feels damp, and it can even feel heavy, making everything wet. The hot temperatures and constant rain make this environment special, but it also means that the weather changes a lot. Some days might be very hot and sunny, while other days could be thunderstorms with lots of rain.

To understand the weather in places like the rainforests, scientists use tools like thermometers, humidity sensors, and rain gauges. These tools help them measure the temperature, humidity, and amount of rain. Scientists also use satellites in space to get a better understanding of the weather from above. They can see clouds and use all kinds of sensors to learn about the weather, so people can better understand it.

Understanding the weather is important for many things, like predicting when it might rain or if there will be a storm. It also helps people plan their activities and stay safe. For example, if a storm is coming, people can take shelter. In the rainforest, orangutans have adapted to survive in this environment.

NARRATIVE

RAINY DAY IN THE RAINFOREST

It was a rainy day in the rainforest. The sun had disappeared behind thick, grey clouds, and the air was heavy with moisture. The rain fell steadily, creating a soft, rhythmic sound. The trees were wet, and the ground was slick. The orangutans were huddled together, looking up at the sky with curiosity.

One of the orangutans, a young male named Leo, looked up at the sky with a determined expression. He had seen the rain before, but this was different. The rain was falling so hard that it was almost impossible to see the trees. Leo knew he had to find a way to stay safe.

He looked around for a moment, then he saw it. A large, thick branch was hanging from a tree, and it was dripping with rain. Leo knew he had to climb it. He took a deep breath and began to climb. The rain was still falling, but Leo was determined to stay safe.

Leo climbed higher and higher, his body wet and shivering. He knew he had to reach the top of the branch before the rain stopped. He took a deep breath and began to climb. The rain was still falling, but Leo was determined to stay safe.

Leo reached the top of the branch and looked down at the rain. He knew he had to stay there until the rain stopped. He took a deep breath and began to climb. The rain was still falling, but Leo was determined to stay safe.
