The Neural Underpinnings of Vicarious Experience Bernadette M. Fitzgibbon,Jamie Ward,2014-08-27 Everyday we vicariously experience a range of states that we observe in other people we may feel embarrassed when witnessing another making a social faux pas or we may feel sadness when we see a loved one upset In some cases this process appears to be implicit For instance observing pain in others may activate pain related neural processes but without generating an overt feeling of pain In other cases people report a more literal conscious sharing of affective or somatic states and this has sometimes been described as representing an extreme form of empathy By contrast there appear to be some people who are limited in their ability to vicariously experience the states of others This may be the case in several psychiatric neurodevelopmental and personality disorders where deficits in interpersonal understanding are observed such as schizophrenia autism and psychopathy In recent decades neuroscientists have paid significant attention to the understanding of the social brain and the way in which neural processes govern our understanding of other people In this Research Topic we wish to contribute towards this understanding and ask for the submission of manuscripts focusing broadly on the neural underpinnings of vicarious experience This may include theoretical discussion case studies and empirical investigation using behavioural techniques electrophysiology brain stimulation and neuroimaging in both healthy and clinical populations Of specific interest will be the neural correlates of individual differences in traits such as empathy how we distinguish between ourselves and other people and the sensorimotor resonant mechanisms that may allow us to put ourselves in another's shoes

Beyond the Resources of Poverty Sebnem Eroglu, 2011 This groundbreaking volume researches the lives of gecekondu settlers in the capital city of Turkey in order to understand how households cope with poverty and why some households are more successful than others in reducing their deprivation It takes a critical stance towards existing conceptions such as household survival livelihood and coping strategy and develops an alternative model based on four types of household response to poverty income generation income allocation consumption and investment In explaining household responses and their outcomes for poverty the book demonstrates the role of different resources beyond income including social economic and cultural capital It emphasises broader structural factors such as labour market processes and state policies which influence the availability and or benefit delivery capacity of household resources and thereby moves beyond the dominant view which overemphasises the resilience of the poor Gender divisions within the household are also examined The book adopts an innovative method for measuring poverty The new method combines objective and subjective dimensions of deprivation to develop a unique way of addressing two central questions what are those standards of living whose absence indicates deprivation and how can the value of each standard of living be determined Resources in Education ,1988
