Antibiotic Use Analysis and Modeling in the United States Nursing Homes by Utilizing Administrative Data Sunah Song, 2021

A large number of Americans with increasing medical complexity reside in nursing homes and around 4 million individuals receive care and services in a nursing home during a year Antibiotics are some of the most frequently prescribed medications in nursing homes and it is estimated that 50 to 70% of residents will be prescribed an antibiotic in a year Unfortunately 25 to 75% of antibiotic use in nursing homes is inappropriate The most common prescribing problems are using an antibiotic when not needed choosing the wrong antibiotic and using the wrong dose or duration These problems can be harmful to the resident's health contributing to potential adverse drug events allergic reactions and antibiotic resistant infections Antibiotic stewardship which seeks to minimize unnecessary and inappropriate antibiotic use is urgently needed in American nursing homes to improve resident outcomes and to reduce the adverse events associated with antibiotic use In 2015 the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services CMS issued a change that required all nursing homes to have an antibiotic stewardship program by November 2017 The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention CDC developed a framework for antibiotic stewardship implementation called the Core Elements that detail actions critical for the success of antibiotic stewardship implementation Two of the seven Core Elements are the tracking and reporting of antibiotic use Currently many nursing homes lack the resources expertise and infrastructure to track and analyze antibiotic use measures Further there is a significant knowledge gap regarding how many and what kinds of antibiotics American nursing home residents receive Our project started with the development of a web based interactive analysis tool to determine the feasibility of using administrative data to quantify antibiotic use The outcomes suggest that pharmacy transaction data can be utilized to capture antibiotic use in many nursing homes Furthermore we will examine antibiotic prescribing patterns and identify facility and resident level risk factors that explain antibiotic use Lastly we will explore the influence of prescribers and estimate the effect of factors on antibiotic use to help to identify opportunities for antibiotic stewardship programs
