

Russian troops were captured and 50,000 killed. Tannenberg remained as one of the greatest victories in German military history. German commander Paul von Hindenburg (1847–1934) and Erich Ludendorff (1865–1937) were hailed as national heroes.

Now, a German thrust towards Warsaw in the winter of 1914 was stopped at Lodz by the Russians, who suffered 120,000 casualties in the process and were forced to abandon an offensive action in Silesia. Russian losses continued to mount, compounding the difficulties of conscription and replenishing their rapidly depleting ranks. By the end of 1915, it was estimated that the Russian Army had lost two million men killed, wounded or captured within the previous six months.

On the Austro-Hungarian front, Russian troops made only gains during an offensive into Galicia. An Austro-Hungarian counterattack drove the Russians back, but the Austro-Hungarian forces were, in turn, compelled to retreat to the foothills of the Carpathian mountains. By the autumn of 1915, the Russians had been completely ejected from Galicia.

Red regime rising

The Germans considered the potential for the success of future offensive actions in the East to be limited, and for much of 1916 the fighting on the Eastern Front was inconclusive. The Russian Kerenski Offensive launched in the summer of 1917 ended in failure. Even though the Russians had absorbed horrendous losses and conscription rates had dropped to major crisis, their vast manpower resource presented an obstacle that senior German commanders believed insurmountable in terms of achieving decisive and total victory. Therefore, greater numbers of German troops were concentrated in the West, while a campaign to foment continuing civil unrest in Russia was emphasized.

The German government facilitated the return of Bolshevik leader Vladimir Lenin (1870–1924) to Russia from exile, and by the autumn of 1917 the October Revolution had brought the Communists to power in Russia. The Treaty of Brest-Litovsk was concluded in the spring of 1918 and effectively ended Russian participation in World War I. Although they had won a victory in the East, the Central Powers sustained a high number of casualties in more than three years of fighting. German losses alone are estimated at 1.4 million.

Eastern armaments

These Russian-manufactured arms that marked their troops at the front were generally of good quality although never available in adequate numbers. Among the most prevalent rifles in the Russian ranks was the Mosin-Nagant bolt-action Model 1891, designed by Russian Army officer Sergei Mosin (1849–1942) and Belgian arms manufacturer Leon Nagant (1835–1900). The weapon was initially produced in Belgium and later adopted by the Russian military and built at locations in Russia as well as the United States.

■ Bolt actions

Typical of mainstream military weapons, these bolt-action rifles dominated and dominated the East. Most are missing Russian Army soldiers, just some of the contributors of the machine and machine gun war were found Imperial soldiers.

The 7.62mm (.303) bolt-action Mosin-Nagant rifle was fed by a five-round box magazine, and the weapon proved to be robust under the harsh conditions often encountered on the Eastern Front. Improvements to the rifle were made during the 1930s, including the introduction of a feed mechanism, greatly decreasing incidences of failure in combat. As production reached sufficient levels, the Mosin-Nagant was widely distributed to Russian Army units, and by the Russo-Japanese War of
