

An Epistle

by Augustine

Background Information: Context

Read the following information to establish how well you understand the appropriate communication of a persuasive message.

1. Brief History of Context

After having previously been accused of being an immoral, uneducated, and/or untrustworthy person, St. Augustine sought to establish his moral authority and credibility as a Christian leader. He did this by writing a letter to the Roman Emperor, Valentinian, in which he explained his position on the issue of the Donatist schism. The Donatists were a group of Christians who believed that the church should be a community of perfect, sinless people, and that anyone who committed a serious sin, such as adultery or murder, should be excommunicated from the church. St. Augustine, on the other hand, believed that the church should be a community of imperfect, sinful people, and that anyone who committed a serious sin should be forgiven and allowed to remain in the church. He argued that the church should be a community of people who were willing to forgive and be forgiven, and that this was the only way to achieve true unity and peace.

St. Augustine's letter to Valentinian was a masterpiece of persuasive writing. He began by acknowledging the emperor's authority and expressing his respect for the emperor's position. He then went on to explain his position on the issue of the Donatist schism, and he argued that the emperor should support the church's position. He used a variety of rhetorical devices, including repetition, parallelism, and metaphor, to make his argument more persuasive. He also used a variety of logical devices, including deductive reasoning and inductive reasoning, to support his argument. The result was a letter that was both powerful and persuasive.
