

Chronic Anxiety Disorder – Quick Guide

Written by: Barbara Thomson – <http://www.anxiety-solutionsreview.com>

Anxiety is a cluster of disorders notable by a figure of both mind and physical symptoms, with no apparent explanation. Apprehension, fear of losing control, fear of going mad, fear of pending death or pending danger, and general agitation are among the symptoms. Usual physical symptoms include vertigo, lightheadedness, chest or abdominal pain, unsettled stomach, increased heart rate, and diarrhea. Since there are so many physical symptoms, chronic anxiety disorder may not be acknowledged and the symptoms only care for as physical disorders. Doctors and researchers believe that with both psychotherapy and prescribed drugs, over 80% of persons with anxiety disorders can be aided. Anxiety can also be one of the wide-ranging symptoms of psychiatric disorders.

Chronic anxiety disorder appears to have become more widespread in recent years, though this may be due to improved diagnostics. And although women are treated for these disorders more often, psychologists consider that this is simply because men are less likely to look for treatment. An anxiety disorder should not be perplexed with everyday stress and worry which, due to circumstances, can affect everyone at one time or another. Anxiety disorders, however, are constant conditions, and should be diagnosed warily by a licensed mental health professional after a full evaluation. While self care-options can help ordinary stress or anxiety, prescription treatments should only be used in obvious cases of chronic and ongoing anxiety.

Sleep disorders or early progression, hopelessness, pressure, muscle aches, and fatigue can lead to chronic anxiety disorder. Chronic anxiety visibly has insistent worries, fears and negative thoughts which last at least six months. Excess of worrying over daily activities and an inclination towards headaches and nausea are ordinary. Acute anxiety, or Panic disorder, comes on as an impulsive attack of fear adjunct with symptoms that may tolerate a similarity to a heart attack having palpitations, chest pain and faintness. Shortness of breath, stomach trouble, chills, cold sweats, hot flashes, or ridiculous fears of death can fuse with these symptoms to produce a wicked experience for the individual having them.
