

Chapter 3: Federalism

- Introduction
  - The most widespread cause of political conflict is national-state government relations, either in terms of different states wanting different things (ex. Slavery) or in terms of national interests vs. state rights (ex. Regulation of business, social welfare)
  - In the 1990s and 2000s, there was/is a trend towards scaling back national government activities and giving them to the states (devolution), often accomplished through the national government giving block grants (money designated for use in certain broad areas) to the states, as enacted by the 1994-96 104th Congress
- Governmental Structure
  - Federalism is a political system with local units of government, as well as a national government, that can make at least some decisions on their own and whose existence is specially protected (ex. In the US, Canada, Australia, India, Germany, and Switzerland)
  - In a unitary system, local governments may be edited or deleted by the national government, and do not have final authority over governmental activities (ex. In France, Great Britain, Italy, and Sweden)
  - In a confederation, the states are sovereign delegate powers to the national government
  - In the US, the independence of the sub-national governments from the national is largely caused by the American idea of self-government and the fact that local constituencies elect and influence Congresspeople
  - Much of the national government's work consists of getting the states to run their programs (ex. Welfare, highways, city improvement, water treatment) in accordance with national goals
- Federalism: Good or Bad?
  - Pros:
    - A small group of people can stop legislation that would be detrimental to those in their locale
    - It is easier for one political group to dominate a smaller political unit
  - Cons:
    - The sub-national governments would be able to make (or obstruct) decisions to prevent progress, protect special interests, and foster corruption
    - It is easier for one political group to dominate a smaller political unit
- Increased Political Activity
  - The most obvious effect of federalism is increased political activity and mobilization, because people see that they have a greater chance of having a practical effect when there are many elected officials and governing bodies with smaller constituencies
  - Federalism lowers the cost of organized political activity by decentralizing authority
  - Much of the details of the federal system were not established by the Founders, but by worked out by conflict and settlement
- The Founding
  - The Founders instated federalism to protect personal liberty, and because the confederation established by the Articles was failing because the states were not cooperating
- A Bold, New Plan
  - In Federalist No. 46, Madison explained that the state and federal governments are
