

AP Bio Cellular Respiration Notes

- Overview of Cellular Respiration:
  - Cellular respiration is the process by which cells convert organic molecules, such as glucose, into usable energy in the form of ATP (adenosine triphosphate).
  - It occurs in three main stages: glycolysis, the Krebs cycle (also known as the citric acid cycle or tricarboxylic acid cycle), and oxidative phosphorylation (including the electron transport chain).
- Glycolysis:
  - Glycolysis is the initial stage of cellular respiration and occurs in the cytoplasm.
  - It involves the breakdown of glucose (a 6-carbon molecule) into two molecules of pyruvate (a 3-carbon molecule).
  - Glycolysis consists of a series of enzymatic reactions that produce a small amount of ATP and NADH.
  - Net ATP production in glycolysis is 2 ATP molecules.
- Pyruvate Oxidation and the Transition Reaction:
  - After glycolysis, each pyruvate molecule enters the mitochondria and undergoes pyruvate oxidation.
  - In pyruvate oxidation, pyruvate is converted to acetyl CoA, releasing one molecule of carbon dioxide and generating one molecule of NADH.
- Krebs Cycle (Citric Acid Cycle):
  - The Krebs cycle occurs in the mitochondrial matrix and completes the oxidation of glucose.
  - Acetyl CoA combines with a 4-carbon molecule (oxaloacetate) to form citrate, initiating a series of redox reactions.
  - The cycle generates three molecules of NADH, one molecule of FADH<sub>2</sub>, one molecule of ATP (through substrate-level phosphorylation), and two molecules of carbon dioxide per acetyl CoA.
  - The Krebs cycle also regenerates oxaloacetate to continue the cycle.
- Oxidative Phosphorylation:
  - Oxidative phosphorylation occurs in the inner mitochondrial membrane and involves the electron transport chain (ETC) and ATP synthesis.
  - NADH and FADH<sub>2</sub> generated in glycolysis, pyruvate oxidation, and the Krebs cycle donate electrons to the ETC.
  - The electrons move through protein complexes in the ETC, generating a proton gradient across the inner mitochondrial membrane.
  - The flow of protons back across the membrane through ATP
