Document A

Source: In the years following the Civil War - throughout the South -state, city, and town governments passed laws to restrict the rights of free African-American men and women. These laws were often called “Black Codes.” The example below of “Black Codes” comes from laws passed in Opelousas, Louisiana immediately after the Civil War.

1. “No [former slave] or freedmen shall be allowed to come within the limits of the town of Opelousas without special permission from his employers. Whoever breaks this law will go to jail and work for two days on the public streets, or pay a fine of five dollars.”
2. “No [former slave] or freedman shall be permitted to rent or keep a house in town under any circumstances. No [former slave] or freedman shall live within the town who does not work for some white person or former owner.”
3. “No public meetings of [former slaves] or freedmen shall be allowed within the town.”
4. “No freedman shall be allowed to carry firearms, or any kind of weapons. No freedman shall sell or exchange any article of merchandise within the limits of Opelousas without permission in writing from his employer.”
5. “Every [former slave] is to be in the service of (work for) some white person, or former owner.”
