American Archives Shawn Michelle Smith,1999-12-19 Visual texts uniquely demonstrate the contested terms of American identity In American Archives Shawn Michelle Smith offers a bold and disturbing account of how photography and the sciences of biological racialism joined forces in the nineteenth century to offer an idea of what Americans look like or should look like Her varied sources which include the middle class portrait baby picture criminal mugshot and eugenicist record as well as literary scientific and popular texts enable her to demonstrate how new visual paradigms posed bodily appearance as an index to interior essence Ultimately we see how competing preoccupations over gender class race and American identity were played out in the making of a wide range of popular and institutional photographs Smith demonstrates that as the body was variously mapped and defined as the key to essentialized identities the image of the white middle class woman was often held up as the most complete American ideal She begins by studying gendered images of middle class domesticity to expose a transformation of feminine architectures of interiority into the essences of blood character and race She reads visual documents as well as literary texts by Nathaniel Hawthorne Pauline Hopkins and Theodore Dreiser as both indices of and forms of resistance to dominant images of gender class race and national identity Through this analysis Smith shows how the white male gaze that sought to define and constrain white women and people of color was contested and transformed over the course of the nineteenth century Smith identifies nineteenth century visual paradigms that continue to shape debates about the terms of American belonging today American Archives contributes significantly to the growing field of American visual cultural studies and it is unprecedented in explaining how practices of racialized looking and the parameters of American looks were established in the first place
