

THE JAMESTOWN SETTLEMENT

In the spring of 1606, a group of English investors formed a joint-stock company called the London Company. They hoped to make money by trading with a new colony that they planned to establish in North America. Investors in the London Company believed gold and silver could be found in America.

King James I of England gave the London Company's charter which permitted it to start a colony in Virginia. Investors spent $10,000 to organize the expedition. Three ships — the Susan Constant, Godspeed, and Discovery — left England with 140 men and 4 boys. The four-month voyage across the Atlantic Ocean was a difficult one, claiming the lives of 40 of the colonists.

The three ships reached the coast of Virginia on April 26, 1607. Captain Christopher Newport, commander of the fleet, began looking for a suitable location for a settlement. The ships sailed about 60 miles up the James River, where they came to a small peninsula. Here they founded Jamestown, the first permanent English settlement in America. Both the river and the town were named in honor of King James. The location of the settlement on a peninsula made it easier to defend, but the land was swampy and the drinking water impure. The swampy land also carried mosquitoes.

The settlers spent much of their time looking for gold and silver, instead of planting crops. They hoped to strike it rich and share the profits with the London Company. Being well-educated gentlemen of noble rank, they were not used to hard work. They chose to live in tents, instead of building houses. Planting crops seemed too difficult and unprofitable. As a result, the men ate poorly and steadily grew weaker. During the first year, over half died of malnutrition, malaria, pneumonia, and dysentery. By January 1, 1608, only 38 colonists were still alive.

The London Company sent more settlers to Jamestown during the second year. Captain John Smith, a former English soldier, became the leader of the settlement. He convinced the colonists to plant crops and strengthen their defenses against hostile Indians. According to a story told by Smith, he was once captured by the Indians and condemned to death. Just before being killed by a stone war club, he was saved by Pocahontas, daughter of Chief Powhatan. Smith claimed that Pocahontas put her head upon his, and begged her father to spare his life. Historians now doubt the truth of Smith's story.

John Smith was severely injured in a gunpowder explosion, and was forced to return to England in 1609. After his departure, hard times again fell upon Jamestown. Fire, drought, Indian attacks, disease, and starvation took a heavy toll. Hundreds died during the winter of 1609–1610. This period became known as the "starving time." When spring arrived, the 60 remaining men decided to return to England. But just as they were leaving, several ships arrived with supplies and more colonists. With spirits uplifted, they decided to return to Jamestown. The settlement grew stronger in the years ahead.

The first farm products to be raised successfully were hogs and Indian corn. Early industries included glass blowing, iron smelting, the making of potash, and shipbuilding. In 1612, a settler named John Rolfe began growing a new type of tobacco using seed from the West Indies. Smoking soon became popular in England, and the Jamestown colonists found that they could sell as much tobacco as could be produced. White indentured servants came to America, and were used to grow tobacco. In 1619, a Dutch ship arrived from Africa, carrying 20 blacks. They were indentured servants, not slaves. An indentured servant had to work for several years for a Virginia planter, in return for his free passage to America. He then became a free man, and could own his own land. As the small farms grew into large plantations, more and more workers were needed. Eventually slaves were imported from Africa.

The population of Jamestown reached about one thousand by 1619. In that year, the London Company sent a number of young women to the colony to become wives of the young settlers. The company wanted the men to marry and make permanent homes in Virginia. Also in 1619, the House of Burgesses was established. The people could now elect representatives to help make laws for the colony. This type of representative government later spread to other English colonies in America.
