AMERICAN SON

"How do you feel about joining the media that has made your life hell?" another reporter called out.

John smiled and shook his head. "You didn't make my life hell." Sometimes he was annoyed by the attention. But it was "part of the bargain" of being him.

"What would your mother say if she could see George?" John paused for a moment and said quietly, "My mother would be really proud to see me up here, and very proud."

Something happened then. Even lower where I stood, way up on the balcony, I could feel it, that powerful, unexpected blurring of the lines between the actual, the life movie and real life. Just like I'd experienced often seeing that photo in John's office. There was a collective gasp, and the actual, the life movie suddenly took a step back. For a moment, the reporters stopped seeing John as a commercial product, as if everyone in the room suddenly took a moment to see him as a person, an orphan who, rich and famous though he may have been, had no mother in the world like all the rest of us.

Then someone else moved her hand and that moment was gone.
