

Section 4

The incoming jet is subjected to constant pressure the fuel supplied. The falling of the fuel level in the main discharge jet is well known, however, a series of holes which are in communication with the atmosphere through the high speed blast. Consequently the fuel now passing from the main discharge jet is well for partly atomized by the air entering these holes and will be completely broken up when entering the small venturi or pass through the large venturi 3 into the induction system.

These are the conditions during all normal driving speeds at part throttle openings.

43 THE ACCELERATING PUMP

To ensure instant acceleration when the throttle is suddenly opened, a small quantity of fuel is ejected into the air stream by an accelerating pump. Following operation of the pump in Figure 16 it will be seen that the pump piston rod 16 with the throttle lever by the link 17. Consequently when the throttle is closed
