

Supplement to the 2015 Chevrolet Corvette Owner Manual

This information replaces the information located under "When Should an Airbag Inflate" found in Section 3 of your owner manual.

When Should an Airbag Inflate?

This vehicle is equipped with airbags. See Airbag System in the owner manual. Airbags are designed to inflate if the impact exceeds the specific airbag system's deployment threshold. Deployment thresholds are used to predict how severe a crash is likely to be in time for the airbags to inflate and help restrain the occupants. The vehicle has electronic sensors that help the airbag system determine the severity of the impact. Deployment thresholds can vary with specific vehicle design.

Frontal airbags are designed to inflate in moderate to severe frontal or rear frontal crashes to help reduce the potential for severe injuries, mainly to the driver's or front outboard passenger's head and chest.

Whether the frontal airbags will or should inflate is not based primarily on how fast the vehicle is traveling. It depends on what is hit, the direction of the impact, and how quickly the vehicle slows down.

Frontal airbags may inflate at different crash speeds depending on whether the vehicle hits an object straight on or at an angle, and whether the object is fixed or moving, rigid or deformable, narrow or wide.

Frontal airbags are not intended to inflate during vehicle rollovers, in rear impacts, or in many side impacts.

In addition, the vehicle has advanced technology frontal airbags. Advanced technology frontal airbags adjust the restraint according to crash severity or occupant interaction.

The vehicle has a seat position sensor that enables the sensing system to monitor the position of the front outboard passenger seat. The seat position sensor provides information that is used to adjust the deployment of the front outboard passenger frontal airbag.
