

Promoting Dialogue on Teacher Professionalism: Opening Possibilities Through Gadamer's Aesthetic Judgment and Play Metaphor

Jeannie Kerr

University of British Columbia

In the province of British Columbia where I live and work, teaching is labelled a profession by the government, universities, and school boards; yet, paradoxically teachers are subject to increasing constraints through the imposition of standards of "professional" competence, prescribed curriculum and standardized assessment practices. I would argue that this paradox relates to the way that teachers' knowledge is conceived. As Joseph Dunne points out, the kind of knowledge a profession embodies is closely tied to its claims to authority and autonomy.¹ Therefore, it is important to gain clarity on the nature of teachers' knowledge and how it relates to ideas of professionalism. In this essay I will trace the emergence and historical roots of two competing views on teachers' professional knowledge: the abstract, objective view, and the situated, subjective view. I will show that each view provides a limited orientation to understanding the nature of teachers' professional knowledge, and demonstrates the need to find a conceptual space that moves beyond this dualism. I suggest that Hans Georg Gadamer's notion of aesthetic judgment, combined with his play metaphor, provide such a conceptual space that allows for a better understanding of teachers' professional knowledge, and a more appropriate orientation from which to engage in dialogue on teacher professionalism.

PROFESSIONALISM, TECHNICAL RATIONALITY, AND CONSTRAINTS ON TEACHING

Teaching children in schools is considered a profession partially based on the idea that the complexity of teaching practice requires deliberation to make appropriate judgments. That teachers possess or can rely on a body of expert objective knowledge, derived from research and abstract theory, to inform these deliberations has been a widely accepted notion in Western ideas of teacher professionalism in the twentieth century.² There is an implicit assumption in this notion that theoretical rigor can mitigate the uncertainty created by dynamic and complex situations.

The idea that teachers' professional knowledge can be understood in this way was called into question in the 1980s by Donald Schön. Schön argues that teachers' knowledge is created in the teaching context. It is therefore attained through knowing and reflecting in action.³ In this view deliberation and judgment are not derived from a body of expert knowledge, but are based on knowledge that is subjectively derived from teaching practice. A number of theorists have taken up Schön's arguments, but the view that teachers' judgments should be based on expert objective knowledge remains dominant and is currently found in demands for evidence-based practice. These rival ideas frame professionalism in teaching in oppositional ways. The dominant view sees professionalism in teaching as based on abstract knowledge of theories and techniques; the challenging view sees it as based on subjective knowledge generated through experience. John Furlong argues that Professional Knowledge, Professional Lives Ivor Goodson, 2003-09-16 Professional Knowledge Professional Lives sets out to examine the state of professional knowledge with regard to teaching and teacher education The current situation of professional knowledge is scrutinised with particular regard to the location of educational study within the faculties of education The fate of disciplinary patterns of study which have come under attack from the proponents of more practical perspectives are also examined Practical perspectives promoted by a wide spectrum of advocates have become part of the fashionable discourse around teacher education recently These perspectives are interrogated and some of the results of such practical fundamentalism are held up for scrutiny The author argues that confining professional knowledge entirely within the practical domain would not seem to be a well thought out strategy for raising professional standards A more active notion of teachers professional knowledge can and should be explored and consolidated by work which focuses on the teacher's life and work using more reflective and public intellectual modes

Democratic Professionalism Albert W. Dzur, 2015-10-20 Bringing expert knowledge to bear in an open and deliberative way to help solve pressing social problems is a major concern today when technocratic and bureaucratic decision making often occurs with little or no input from the general public Albert Dzur proposes an approach he calls democratic professionalism to build bridges between specialists in domains like law medicine and journalism and the lay public in such a way as to enable and enhance broader public engagement with and deliberation about major social issues Sparking a critical and constructive dialogue among social theories of the professions professional ethics and political theories of deliberative democracy Dzur reveals interests motivations strengths and vulnerabilities in conventional professional roles that provide guideposts for this new approach He then applies it in examining three practical arenas in which experiments in collaboration and power sharing between professionals and citizens have been undertaken public journalism restorative justice and the bioethics movement Finally he draws lessons from these cases to refine this innovative theory and identify the kinds of challenges practitioners face in being both democratic and professional
