commitment is limited My thesis aims to determine the regulation of meiotic commitment using the model organism Saccharomyces cerevisiae budding yeast In budding yeast starvation is the major meiosis inducing signal and cells pass through meiotic commitment in prometaphase I To understand the underlying mechanism of meiotic commitment I performed a genome scale screen and identified five new regulators of meiotic commitment the 14 3 3 proteins Bmh1 and Bmh2 Polo kinase Cdc5 a protein involved in nutrient sensing called Bcy1 and the meiosis specific kinase Ime2 I identified how these proteins regulate meiotic commitment with the 14 3 3 proteins being the central regulators of meiotic commitment 14 3 3 proteins are conserved across different species and perform a number of roles by binding and modulating the activity or localization of target proteins I have discovered that Bmh1 Bmh2 interacts with the middle meiosis transcription factor Ndt80 leading to an increase in Ndt80 protein levels which in turn leads to an increase in expression of Ndt80 target genes Bmh1 Bmh2 also enhances Cdc5 kinase activity which likely has a substrate important for meiotic commitment Furthermore Bmh1 Bmh2 interacts with RNA binding protein Pes4 to maintain meiotic commitment In addition to the roles in meiotic commitment I show that Bmh1 and Bmh2 are important for DNA repair during prophase I My work uncovers a key network needed to maintain genome stability during meiosis
