

Fig. 5-3 Front Brake Seals

When the brake pedal is released quickly, the master cylinder piston returns immediately to the released position. Holes in the piston head allow fluid to pass from the right to the left side of the piston head, past the primary cup, as the piston returns to the released position. This transfer of fluid is necessary when the master cylinder piston returns to the released position faster than fluid returns from the lines.

At the same time (when the pedal is released) the brake shoe return springs force the wheel cylinder pistons to return to the released position. Fluid forced out of the wheel cylinders by this action returns to the master cylinder by overcoming the pressure of the piston spring which holds the check valve closed. As this fluid returns, the excess portion will return to the reservoir through the compensating port which is opened only when the master cylinder piston is in the released position. The piston spring will close the check valve when the pressure in the lines is reduced to approximately 15 lbs., maintaining a slight pressure in the lines. The purpose of this pressure is to keep wheel cylinder cups from leaking and to reduce the possibility of air entering the system.

PERIODIC SERVICE

The foot brake system requires a check for leaks at regular lubrication periods (see General Lubrication Section), and periodic inspection to see that there is more than 2" from the bottom of pedal pad to floor mat when brakes are applied (2" or less indicates need of adjustment). When the brakes are adjusted, the fluid level in the master cylinder should be checked and brought to  $\frac{3}{4}$ " from gasket surface on top of master cylinder filler neck as shown in Fig. 5-5. (Refer to page 5-12 for recommended brake fluid.)

At the time the car is on a lift for chassis lubrication, visual inspection of the brake hose and lines should be made for signs of chaffing, deterioration or other damage.

The hand brake cables must be lubricated yearly or when brakes are relined. The procedure for lubricating cables is outlined in the General Lubrication Section.
