

Tree Life

Objectives

Students will:

- explain in simple terms how a tree grows from seed through maturity and finally decays and returns to the soil;
- identify and count annual rings;
- describe seasonal changes in wildlife and in broadleaf trees.

Background Information

Minnesota, like many parts of the world, has very cold winters. During this time, the ground is hard and seems lifeless under layers of snow and frost. But under all this cold lie the seeds, roots, and stems that will be next summer's plants. Each seed holds a tiny plant and some food that will feed the new plant. Roots and stems have tiny buds that will begin to grow when the weather warms. The cold earth is far from lifeless. Winter is simply a time of rest.

As spring arrives, the rays of the sun begin to warm the earth. Snow and frost melt. The moisture soaks the seeds and makes them swell. The tiny plants begin to grow. Buds and roots also begin to grow and soon we see new plants.

Through the hot summer months, plants grow strong and sturdy. But at the end of the season, a plant's work is usually done. For some plants, it's the end of their lives. For others, it means going into a long rest as the autumn ground freezes and there is no more water. They will "sleep" (lie dormant) again until spring, when the life cycle will start all over again.

Vocabulary Words

seeds	root tips
roots	cambium
stems	outer bark
buds	sap
dormant	annual ring
life cycle	inner wood
chlorophyll	broadleaf
photosynthesis	needleleaf
seedling	decay
sapling	recycling

It Starts With Seeds

They can be as large as a baseball or as small as the head of a pin. Some are flat, some are round; others are long and thin. Most travel ... some by air, some by water, some by hitching a ride with a passing person or animal. Touch them with a bit of warmth and moisture, and the miracle of growth begins. What are they? Seeds, wonderful seeds!

Seeds look and feel very different from each other, but they're all alike in important ways. Each of them is a baby plant with its own food supply, all put together in one handy, self-sealed package. The cross section on page 24 shows the parts of a tree seed.

All seeds have the same needs for growth—moisture, warmth, sunlight, food, and air. And they all begin to grow in much the same way. Moisture soaks the outer shell of the seed until it becomes soft. The food inside expands as the water enters the seed. If warmth is also present, the shell breaks open and growth begins.
