

GENERAL DESCRIPTION

The engine used on all 1960 series Cadillac cars is basically the same engine as used in 1959. There are a few minor changes which add to the smoothness and performance of the 1960 engine.

These changes include a full flow oil filter mounted on the right side of the engine block, just ahead of the flywheel housing, and a side seal type piston oil ring. Fig. 9-1, that incorporates an expander and two rails.

Use of fuels lower than those of the required octane ratings may result in damage to the engine. For fuel octane recommendations under various operating conditions, refer to Section 10, Note 1.

Engine Lubricating System

Oil is forced by the oil pump, through the main bearing cap and full flow oil filter to the vertical oil header which feeds the rear main bearing. The remaining portion of the engine lubricating system cycle operates as described on Page 9-4 of the 1959 Cadillac Shop Manual.

Specifications and service procedures that differ from the 1959 model are outlined under Service Information below.
