

INSTRUMENTS

The instruments, gauges and warning lights conveniently grouped in the instrument cluster are designed to tell you at a glance many important things about the performance of your car. The information on this and the following two pages will enable you to more quickly understand and properly interpret these instruments. Familiarize yourself with their location and purpose and make it a practice to scan the instrument cluster as you start the engine, after it starts, and periodically as you drive your Chevrolet.

ENGINE TEMPERATURE INDICATOR LIGHTS

These indicator lights are provided in the instrument cluster to indicate a normal operating engine temperature and also quickly warn of an overheated engine. As you start the car, both the red and the green indicator lights will go on to let you know that they are operating properly.

After the engine starts, the red light will turn off immediately. It will light up at no other time unless for some reason the engine reaches a dangerously high operating temperature. If the red light should come on, the engine must be stopped until the cause of the overheating is corrected.

The green light will remain on only until the engine reaches its normal operating temperature and will then go out.

Check these lights frequently as you drive. Engine temperature is normal as long as both the red and green lights are off.
