

Have you ever...

Felt ill-equipped to help a colleague with a decision or problem?

Had a conversation with a colleague that felt hard and/or unproductive?

Moaned to a friend about the behaviour of a colleague without knowing what to say to them directly?

Avoided having a conversation with a direct report about their performance, hoping the situation will resolve itself?

Felt unsure about how to respond to unsolicited feedback, or an unreasonable request at work?

Felt nervous about meeting and talking to new people at a networking event?

Julia Lessing

Quondam Actuarial

High performing teams need good communication to operate. While very few of us enjoy participating in difficult conversations, there are simple techniques that anyone can learn that will make every conversation at work easier and more effective.

In this interactive session on Active Listening for Actuaries, Julia will discuss why listening skills are important but underrated in the workplace. Using video role play examples, she will teach you some practical skills that anyone can learn and practise to have easier conversations at work (and at home).
